

Spencer Rosenvall

1-12-12

Commitment Ch. 8

In our adult roles textbook it explains that men are more likely to become uncommitted to something they committed to. Generally, it depends on the individual. I think that a higher percentage of males become uncommitted than females, though. It's actually a fact from previous studies. In my own personal experience, I have previously been committed to the swim team here at Cyprus High School. While I was on the swim team, I did notice that more males became lazy, and uncommitted than the girls. I think the girls lost about 4 girls and the boys lost more than 20. At the beginning of the year we had 60 boys and I think we have 25 now. I interviewed my good friend Tané and his opinion states that it depends how dedicated that individual is to that thing and how that subject relates to your life. I also agree with Tané's statement, but I still strongly believe that men become more undedicated than women. I have a good lazy friend named Weston Hall that is the king of being on a team, but being totally uncommitted and getting away with it. I also interviewed him and his opinion to this argument is "your mom". I then asked him to consider giving an explanation of his argument, but all I received in return was, "your mom", again. I gave up on trying to get this uncommitted person's opinion and decided that uncommitted people were never really that committed from the beginning. Maybe they just made that commitment to be with their fellow friends, but they realized that this commitment wasn't what they wanted, or was bargaining for. I think we all have friends like my friend Weston, that we can relate to. People have the free agency to choose for themselves, and if they choose to be uncommitted, that's their own decision.